Know your rights
If you are new to the workplace, you may need someone to guide you, and help you learn about your rights and responsibilities as an employee. Be an informed employee.

A strong work ethic
Work ethic is the set of behaviors and attitudes that you demonstrate at work and apply to your job — not something you were born with, this is learned. We can help you develop your work ethic by understanding how an employer will be viewing you.

Master the basics
Colleges report that many incoming freshman are not ready for the rigor of a college curriculum. Employers report that too many individuals entering the workforce do not have the necessary reading, writing and math skills. If you are experiencing trouble with reading, writing or math, help is available! Ask for advice on actions you can take. DON’T WAIT.
